

RESOURCE LIST

CALIFORNIA SIGN LANGUAGE INTERPRETING AND TEXT CAPTIONING REFERRAL AGENCIES

The Justice Department defines a qualified interpreter as one who can “interpret effectively, accurately, and impartially both receptively and expressively, using any necessary specialized vocabulary.”

This list is not all-inclusive and is strictly provided as a resource of information to provide accessible programs and services. The user should contact the agencies and inquire about current rates, certification, and geographical availability. Please note that the Governor's Committee for Employment of Disabled Persons and the Employment Development Department do not endorse the referenced agencies.

To keep this list current, please submit in writing any suggested corrections, deletions or additions to our office.

WHEN TO CHOOSE INTERPRETING OR TEXT CAPTIONING?

The appropriate service (auxiliary aid) will depend on the type of activity and the needs of the person. A deaf person who uses sign language may need an interpreter to understand a PTA meeting or to talk to a county social worker or police officer. But a deaf or hard of hearing person who does not use sign language may need text captioning, an amplification system or another method of making communication understandable. The deaf or hard of hearing person is your best resource to find out their needs. Also remember that televised or videotaped programs should be shown with captions if an interpreter is not provided.
